Not illustrated.1887 Excerpt: ... On the 10th of October he returned to his work, and appeared to be in his usual health; but he became unwell, with pain in the abdomen, like Colic, and with pain in the back. On the 18th he had partial motor paralysis in the lower limbs, and on the 19th complete motor paralysis of those limbs and of the trunk, and partial motor paralysis of the upper limbs and face. He was taken to St. Thomas's Hospital, where he died on the 20th. To the last he was free from all the usual symptoms of Hydrophobia, and the progress of his disease and the manner of his death were so similar to those of what is described as acute ascending Paralysis, or Landry's Paralysis, that a verdict to this effect was given at a Coroner's inquest. But the certainty that his death was due to the virus of Rabies was proved by experiments by Mr. Horsley. A portion of his spinal cord was taken to provide material for inoculations, and rabbits and a dog inoculated with it died with characteristic signs of paralytic Rabies, such as usually occurs in rabbits. In most of the other cases of death after treatment by the intensive method, the symptoms have been nearly the same as those just related; but in none of them had the same test of death from Hydrophobia been applied. The likeness of the symptoms to those of the form of Rabies called dumb or paralytic, usually observed in rabbits, has suggested, as we have said, that the deaths were due not to the virus of the rabid dog or cat, but to that injected from the spinal cord of the rabbit. But this is far from certain. In the case of Goffi, especially, the incubation period was such as would have followed the bite of the cat, not the inoculation of highest intensity; and the incubation period in the rabbits and dog inoculated from his spinal cord w...
