VIII PREFACE. recording more or less fully the impressions of the day. Many a page has been written amid hurry and confusion, or after a long and fatiguing march; but I have preferred giving unaltered the remarks which the moment suggested. The rapidity with which the advance of winter obliged me to traverse the interesting country which borders upon Koordistan, unfortunately, prevented my adding to the very scanty information which we possess regarding the geography of that portion of Asia; but I venture to hope, that even the slight sketches contained in these pages may throw some additional light upon the more interesting subject of the social and moral condition of nations to which public attention has of late years been so eagerly directed. Rode Hatty Cheshire April 6th, 1839.
