Discover Simple & Powerful Steps To Easily Prevent Various Skin Infections and Disorders Linked To Diabetes. ($47 Book Included Inside For Free) The study has proven that diabetes can affect a person's entire body. However, the most commonly affected part of the body, especially during the initial symptoms of diabetes, is the skin. Various infections and disease may occur on your skin even if you do not have diabetes, especially if you don't take good care of it. Having diabetes makes it more difficult since diabetes triples the possibility of getting skin diseases and it makes it even worse. Diabetes and uncontrolled hyperglycemia (high blood glucose) can result in a reduction of blood flow to the skin, as well as damage your blood vessels and nerves. The changes and decreased blood flow to the skin can result in changes in the skin's collagen. It is responsible for the skin color and texture. The decreased blood circulation also affects the body's ability to heal its wounds faster. Damage to the skin's vascular endothelial cells may even reduce its ability to sweat and increase sensitivity to temperature and pressure. Some glucose-lowering medications may also increase the risk of developing diabetes-related skin complications. Diabetic people are more prone to getting the Skin Diseases, Infections and Disorders.
