Cyberstalking is a form of cyberbullying where adults are involved by targeting an individual or organization through monitoring, identity theft, false accusations, intimidation, and harassment. This can be done either online or offline. Perhaps it should also be noted that the freelance nature of the Internet continues to allow the problem of cyberstalking to grow and therefore it is imperative for online media to put in place greater means and ways to eliminate this problem. The Internet and personal computers connect homes and individuals to the rest of the world in ways never seen before in the history of mankind where anonymous characters are assumed and chats range from music, business to sex. This space can be a good place where business can thrive, information, and education that are of integrity can be accessed but unfortunately it is also a place the criminals of all shades and strips can thrive. Criminal behavior is very adaptive to new technologies and this is the reason why as the Internet and new technological advances continue to pervade our lives, so will these negative cyber activities endure and escalate. Cyberbullying has to be prevented and deliberated upon at all levels not only for the current generations but also for posterity and the upcoming generations. This is why teaching cyberstalking at K-12 levels is needed now more than ever. Some schools like Zapphire School of Informatics and Technology (<http://www.zapphireinformatics.org>) have a curriculum in place to do just that. This book will discuss cyberstalking in the digital age, thwarting cyberstalking, tips for stopping cyberstalking, and advantages of the Internet. Students in K-12 should find the book informative and engaging. Available as a printed copy and ebook.
