Martin Cunningham's Birthday (Volume 1) Malcolm Frazer

“Upstairs, from John's room, the insistent creaking of labouring bedsprings continued. It was this that had woken him, or so he supposed. He carried on smoking until the creaks became less frenzied and finally, after one last wistful groan, stopped altogether. He leant across and stubbed out his crumbling cigarette into a plastic cup. There were many things he arguably needed on his birthday but to be woken by John humping upstairs was not one of them. . . Tomorrow it would all be very different. Today was his last day at the General Hospital with Harrington, the Old Fart. Tomorrow would be very different. “ So begins Martin Cunningham’s 23rd birthday and his final eventful day as a senior surgical medical student. He is right about one thing: by the day’s end nothing would ever be the same again.
