Excerpt from Legends of Michigan and the Old North West: Or, a Cluster of Unpublished Waifs, Gleaned Along the Uncertain, Misty Line, Dividing Traditional From Historic Times

The Author of this series of Indian Legends has been, for nearly forty years, a resident of western Michigan. Soon after first reaching the then wilderness, and for several succeeding seasons, his explorations as a Surveyor and Geologist were widely extended. The scenery, topography, water courses and indigenous products of various sections in both peninsulas became familiar objects of sight and investigation.
