I Sing the Body Electronic: A Year with Microsoft on the Multimedia Frontier Fred Moody

When you strip away the luster, novelty, & excitement surrounding the newest generation of computer software -- multimedia software on CD-ROM -- you find a world not of high-tech efficiency but of simple human muddling. Moody discovered this when he spent more than a year shadowing a team of Microsoft developers working on a children's compact disc to be called Explorapedia. He watched the struggle to achieve the perfect blend of technical innovation, artistic charm, & educational content. Offers a lesson in what it takes to manage the exhilarating & turbulent process of turning a computer into a multimedia art machine.
